

STREET DANCE

Street dance is a relatively new style of dance originating in America in the late 1970's. In the ghettos of America young, predominantly black youths would dance in groups and engage in battles of skill, timing and rhythmic interpretation of rap or hip hop music. These groups would be known as a 'Crew'. The styles of dance they performed are what we recognise today as Street dance, Break dance and Body popping. This dance style grew in popularity throughout the world when it was performed in the films 'Flash dance', 'Electric Bugaloo' and 'House party' and influences many of the popular music videos.
